

Farm Forestry – future directions?

Grower discussion on the future of established farm forestry in the region

How have things changed?

Are there opportunities for markets for thinnings?

What is the endgame and how should we be managing the resource?

In the period 2000-2005, around 40 Landholders participated in farm forestry programs partially funded by government programs. Many of the blocks are currently being thinned and there is interest amongst some growers in investigating the potential markets for thinnings, and what might happen in the future to inform management of the plantations.

Gary Seliba, Regional Development Australia – Murray will help facilitate the discussion
